I walked over the smooth pebbles in my battered flip flops and I soon arrived at a peaceful beach. The sea stood still right in front of me and the hot, golden grains of sand tickled as they passed through my toes. In the middle of the sand, there lay a bright, orange starfish. It was sunbathing leisurely as no noisy tourists had managed to invade the peace yet. To my right, there stood a tall, tilted palm tree which almost seemed to reach the fluffy, white clouds above. Smooth, grey rocks surrounded some smaller plants. I giggled as I watched some creatures search for shade within the hidden rocks. In the distance, the craggy mountains mountains separated the calm sea from the still clouds. I decided to stay and keep the starfish company as the whole place was a sight to behold.
