On Friday evening, there was a party in the third-floor apartment. Graham, the caretaker, was unimpressed because he was told there was some damage done to the property. When he unlocked the apartment, he was left astounded. The sight in front of him was completely unbearable to see. Words such as untidy and unclean were not enough to describe the room. The room was atrocious.

There were wires, clothes, rags, toys and plants scattered everywhere.
Unfortunately, there was bright orange paint and pop spilled across the sky-blue carpet. Graham knew the carpets would need replacing because no amount of scrubbing or cleaning would get those stains out. He thought it was that the tenants did not clean the apartment, nor did they abide by the rules of no parties on weekdays. After this incident, he knew he'd make the rules a lot tighter and stricter for his tenants.
