

Using Commas in Lists, Adverbials and Clauses

Retell the story of 'Goldilocks and the Three Bears'. Make sure to use commas for lists, adverbials, parenthesis and clauses.

One day, Goldilocks went for a walk through the woods. She skipped along, picked some flowers and sang happily to herself. After a while, she stumbled across a quaint cottage. The cottage, with the door ajar, looked warm and inviting, so she cautiously peered into the room. On the table, there were three steaming bowls of porridge. As she was hungry, Goldilocks decided to try the food. The first bowl was too salty, the second bowl was too hot, but the third bowl was just right, so she finished the lot.

When she had eaten, she wanted to rest her legs. Out of the corner of her eye, she spotted three chairs. The first chair was too big, the second chair was too small, but the third chair was just right. She was enjoying her rest when the chair broke! She decided to find somewhere else to rest, so she went upstairs in search of a bed. The first bed was too hard, the second bed was too soft, but the third bed was just right. Goldilocks, feeling sleepy, quickly dozed off.

The bears returned and realised that someone was in their house. The porridge had gone, the chair was broken and someone was sleeping in one of the beds! After hearing a roar, Goldilocks jumped out of bed, ran down the stairs and sprinted all the way home.
