

Relative Clauses

Think about your first day of Year 6.

Write a recount of your first day, including at least five relative clauses. You should include a range of relative pronouns in your writing and vary your sentence structure.

Make sure to include how you felt on the day and the activities that you completed.

You should write a minimum of two paragraphs.

Relative pronouns you could use:

who

that

whose

where

My alarm sounded on the first day of Year 6 and my stomach churned as I started to think about the day ahead. My uniform, which was laid out for me, was a little too big. The sleeves on my jumper were baggy; it could have fit my older brother! The new skirt that my mum hoped I would grow into, was almost past my knees.

When I arrived at school, I could see familiar faces in the distance. My friends, whose parents had let them walk to school, were sat chatting about their summer holidays. They were sat in the corner of the playground, where we always hang out at playtime.

Once the bell rang, our teacher, who we met last year, came out to greet us. From what I remember, he was very funny. As soon as we entered the classroom, Mr Howard took the register, which signalled the beginning of our first day in Year 6. The first task he gave us was to write about a day when we knew that our parents were proud of us.
